Performance review

Over the past 12 months, key contributors to performance included SK Hynix. The company reported strong earnings results, as supply shortages drove up average selling prices (ASPs) for its memory chips and boosted its margins. Shareholder returns also improved, as the company announced a higher-than-expected dividend payout. Credicorp also rose after posting robust net income growth and a meaningful improvement in asset quality thanks to a decline in its non-performing loan (NPL) ratio. Just as important was the growth of the company's digital ecosystem, with Yape, its digital payments platform, now boasting more than 15m active users. Looking ahead, the recent licensing of Credicorp-owned Tenpo, a fully digital bank, opens up further growth opportunities.

On the negative side, leading online truck freight platform Full Truck Alliance (FTA) declined, as order growth slowed, mostly due to the company's efforts to remove ultra-low-price orders to improve trucker welfare. However, FTA's longer-term prospects remain bright. It should continue to strengthen with scale, as shippers move more of their business on to the platform. The company is still in the early stages of monetisation, which implies scope for healthy growth, and its valuation continues to look reasonable. Sea also declined after reporting tighter margins due to the ongoing investment into its e-commerce business. On the other hand, revenue growth was strong, and its credit business expanded at a brisk clip.

Portfolio review

There were no significant purchases over the quarter. The Fund sold its small position in China Resources Beer to raise cash for higher-conviction investments.

Stock spotlight

Mediatek is one of the largest chip design companies globally. We have been following Mediatek for many years and have witnessed its performance through the cycles. Throughout the ups and downs in its history, its talented engineers and well-aligned management team usually find a way through to the next "big thing". From optical drives for computers to scan CDs, it entered the smartphone supply chain with 2G modem chips and benefited from technology upgrades each year – until it collapsed in 2015-17 amid poor execution and competition from both low- and high-end competitors. In 2018 Rick Tsai joined Mediatek from TSMC and focused on getting the basics right again. We believe Mediatek has been transformed under his leadership into a better-quality company. In recent years, the company has improved its competitiveness, and we believe its market share will likely remain stable. With the smartphone market now in the mature stages, the company is investing into new areas (ASIC, auto, augmented reality/virtual reality, Internet of Things, artificial intelligence) to diversify and internationalise its business in the long run.

Outlook

The situation in the Middle East is clearly clouding the near-term outlook. Around 20% of global seaborne oil and liquefied natural gas (LNG) flows through the Strait of Hormuz, so any disruption has immediate implications for energy prices, freight costs and inflation. We obviously do not have a crystal ball, but our base case is that there are political constraints – particularly for the US – that should limit the duration of the conflict and lead to some degree of de-escalation in coming weeks. That said, history shows these situations can evolve in unintended ways. If the conflict persists or escalates, the implications would extend well beyond the region and into the global economy.

In terms of portfolio impact, the first-order effects are largely regional, where we have no exposure. The second-order effects are more relevant: energy flows through the Strait and the resulting price impact. Asia is particularly exposed given its reliance on imported energy from the Middle East. South Asia – especially India – is more vulnerable, as energy is both a large import item and a meaningful component of CPI, which is likely to weigh on consumption. North Asia will also be affected, though the impact should be more muted given higher income levels and greater resilience.

Against this backdrop, we remain confident in our holdings' ability to navigate the environment, as they have done in the past. The companies we own benefit from strong competitive positions – whether through network effects, brands, distribution, cost leadership or high switching costs for essential products and services. Historically, this has translated into pricing power and the ability to protect margins even in more inflationary or volatile conditions.

On balance, we continue to see the portfolio as attractively valued relative to its growth potential. Our analysis suggests earnings can compound at a mid- to high-teens rate over the medium term, above the broader market. If the conflict continues, there is likely some downside to this, but we would still expect the portfolio to hold up better than the market. Against this, the portfolio trades at around 18x price-to-free cash flow (vs. 22x for the market), which we view as reasonable. While near-term volatility may persist, the long-term case remains intact.

Our long-term investment themes:

- Dominant consumer franchises which have an edge in brand, distribution and innovation.
- High quality financials, supported by a strong deposit franchise or a specific loan niche.
- The growing trend of digitalisation and online services.
